Where Does the U.S. Stand in Gender-Equality Laws?

By Mona Reno

Since 2010, the World Bank has tracked gender equality in 190 economies in a report currently titled Women, Business and the Law. <https://wbi.worldbank.org/en/reports> Here is how they describe the importance of gender equality.

“Gender equality is essential for ending poverty on a livable planet. By ensuring that gender-based discrimination does not hinder women’s access to resources and opportunities, a gender-inclusive society can maximize its human capital and productivity. Inclusion starts with equal laws. Equal treatment of women under the law is associated with more women entering and remaining in the labor force and rising to managerial positions. Equal treatment also generates higher wages for women and facilitates business ownership by more women. And yet discriminatory laws persist in all regions, depriving women of their human rights and threatening their ability to contribute fully to their region’s economy and overall global prosperity.”

The World Bank had established eight indicators, structured around women’s interactions with the law as they begin, progress through, and end their careers: Assets, Entrepreneurship, Marriage, Mobility, Parenthood, Pay, Pension and Workplace. In 2024 they added two additional indicators: Childcare, and Safety. Each economy was rated with a score from 0 to 100. The average global score is 77.9.

They found that only 14 economies grant a woman legal rights equal to those of a man across all of the areas measured, with a score of 100: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Latvia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

The United States was 44th on the ranked list with a score of 91.3. NWHP member Marcia Cuccaro, wrote a very thorough status report of the Equal Rights Amendment in the U.S. in the NWHP News V28 N3 Sept. 2023 Her findings were that “whether or not the 28th Amendment . . . ever becomes law, it appears abundantly clear, the majority of Americans believe in equal rights for both women and men.” In fact, many people believe that in the U.S. women and men have equal rights. Yes, we do pretty well compared to many other countries, but 44th isn’t a rank of which to be proud.

2025 NWHP Community Outreach Retired Public Employees of Nevada (RPEN)

On January 13, 2025 NWHP gave a presentation to the RPEN at the Elks Club in Reno. NWHP President, Sue Davis and NWHP Vice President Joy Orlich presented an overview of our organization and highlighted our accomplishments over 30 years. We found three former RPEN members in our biographies and highlighted their contributions to Nevada’s history: Mildred Bray, Bertha Sanford Woodard, and Katherine Norrid Mergen. Approximately 30 people attended our presentation and we received many compliments. Thank you to Rosalyne Reynolds, NWHP Board Member, for inviting us.

Laura Tennant Inducted Into the Nevada Press Foundation Hall of Fame

From an article by Melody Hoover in the Dayton Valley Dispatch 9/13/2024, p. 3

Laura Tennant was one of eight journalists inducted into the Nevada Newspaper Hall of Fame on September 14th, 2024. Laura received her first award for a black and white sports photo of a football player at Dayton High School. Her awards and achievements have included the presidency of the Nevada Press Association board in 2004 and over 40 first-place awards in the small newspaper category. She has served as editor for both Dayton and Fernley offices with the Fernley Leader-Dayton Courier. She still submits history-based articles to the Dayton Valley Dispatch.

Laura Tennant is the 2022 NWHP Woman of Achievement for the Nevada Women’s Fund.

30th Anniversary of Nevada Women’s History Project!!

By Patti Bernard

In 1993, Jean Ford and some like-minded individuals set out to create an organization that would publicly highlight the important roles women played in the history of Nevada, a facet sadly lacking in both school textbooks and public history books. The non-profit, Nevada Women’s History Project, was founded in March 1995 composed of 50 individuals and organizations, statewide, to help research and publicize women’s contributions in Nevada’s history.

In 2005, exactly 20 years later, we achieved a major goal by installing the Sarah Winnemucca statue in Washington D.C.’s National Statuary Hall Collection. This was accomplished after heroic legislative lobbying and fundraising to honor the first Nevada Native American woman who opened the first Paiute school in the state and published the first book ever written by a Native American.

We invite both members and friends of NWHP to a fundraiser luncheon to celebrate these two milestones in Nevada Women’s History, and to honor the women who helped make NWHP into the recognized and credible Nevada women’s historical resource that it has become.

Marian LaVoy Reaches the Century Mark!

By Patti Bernard

On January 15, 1925, a baby girl was born in a house on Court Street in the little town of Elko, Nev. Her parents named her Marian, and she spent her youth growing up on a ranch outside the town.

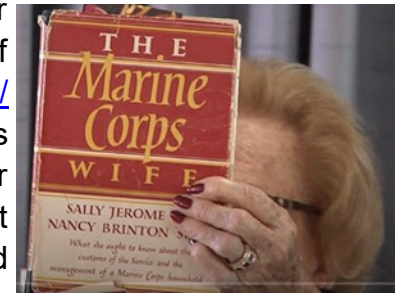

Fast forward to that same day this January 2025, and longtime NWHP member, Marian will turn 100 years old. What should you know about Marian? NWHP interviewed her twice and both interviews are on our website.

Her first interview occurred in 2017 when she was part of a panel of five military wives representing different eras in U.S. military history. <https://nevadawomen.org/research-center/nevada-military-women-on-the-homefront-1942-2017>. They spoke about their lives as Military wives.

Marian was the representative for WWII, as her husband John, saw combat as a marine pilot. Life as a military wife then, was far different than military wives' experiences in today's armed forces.

Marian's second interview was done in 2023 when we interviewed her for her own oral history. We hope you go to the website and watch both of the video interviews of this amazing woman <https://nevadawomen.org/lavoy-marian-reno-washoe-county/>. The shorthand bio of Marian testifies that she has spent her life in service to her community and country. After John's retirement Marian lived in Reno and Fallon. She was a President in the Rose Society in Reno, and a member of the Reno Parks and Recreation Board for years. In Fallon she was a volunteer oral history interviewer for the Churchill County Museum, and was named Woman of the Year for the P.E.O. Sisterhood (<https://peonv.org>), among other honors. She has been a stalwart supporter of NWHP for over 20 years. HAPPY 100TH BIRTHDAY, MARIAN. Your life is an inspiration to us all. You represent a true "Nevada Woman."

A Tribute to Lisa-Marie Lightfoot

By Kathy Noneman

For the past 28 years, we have had the privilege of Lisa-Marie's leadership in NWHP. She has shared her thoughts, ideas, organizational skills, and fundraising talents with us. She is an expert on all matters concerning non-profit organizations. Lisa-Marie has been a Board member for many years serving countless hours and holding many offices, both locally and statewide. She has used her computer and communication skills to provide news and information to our members. She also created our E-blast which she sent out monthly. Lisa-Marie was our Woman of Achievement in 2009 for the Nevada Women's Fund. For her service to our members and the organization, we sincerely thank her and her husband Bruce. Best wishes to the Lightfoot team as you continue to serve our community in your new ventures.

Ruth Jones, Publisher and Author

By Patti Bernard

February is Black History Month and NWHP is honoring Ruth Mae Giles Jones, the first African American woman to publish a newspaper in Nevada, The Sentinel, that ran from 1959 to 1977. She also published a book called Reno Linkage in 1977, “composed of biographical sketches, and photographs, to show the link between contributions by blacks and the progress in the state.” (Reno Evening Gazette Sept. 1, 1976)

Ruth was born in Detroit in 1921. She moved to Sparks in 1956 with her three sons. Almost immediately she immersed herself in community activities. In 1959, she was a charter member of the Macedonia Baptist Church in Sparks, a member of the Career Women’s club of Reno, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). In 1968, she was the chairman of the dedication committee of the “Instant Park,” that was formally dedicated as the Pat Baker Park in Northeast Reno. She was also a member of the Black Professional Business Women’s Association.

In 1970, Ruth ran unsuccessfully to be the first Black woman to serve in the Nevada State Assembly with a platform that included: reorientation of federal programs for First Americans to help them maintain their traditions, and a guaranteed annual income for all Americans below the national poverty line.

Included in Ruth’s many honors was the Sojourner Truth Meritorious Service Award presented by the National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women’s Club for her active civic work with children and adults.

Ruth passed away December 17, 1977, and is interred in Mountain View Cemetery in Reno, Nev.

The Member Appreciation Garden Party

By Patti Bernard

After weeks of high daily temperatures, nature’s “forces” united on August 17, 2024, to give us a beautiful Saturday to celebrate our organization and its members. Thirty-five members and guests sat down in a garden setting to enjoy some delicious salads and desserts amongst the blooming flowers. Introductions were initiated and conversations flowed freely.

NWHP Chair Sue Davis led off with a recap of the year’s activities and previewed upcoming events. Nevada Women’s Lobby Chair Elisa Cafferata spoke to the group about the history of her organization, their mission, and goals for the coming legislative session.

Neal Cobb spoke about, and sold copies of the last book that our deceased member, Joyce Cox wrote, Behind the Arch. Before we realized, it was time to end. A huge thank you to all that attended and special thanks to Patti Bernard, Marcia Cuccaro, Sue Davis, Kathy Noneman, Mona Reno, Joy Orlich and Roz Reynolds, for providing such a sumptuous repast.

Biography

One of Nevada's early Civil Rights advocates and a humanitarian, Alice Lucretia Smith dedicated her life to helping others achieve their potential regardless of race or financial condition. She was a pioneer in improving understanding between the races. Born in Bay St. Louis, Mississippi to parents who were the children of slaves, she attended public schools and received her teaching credentials at Mississippi State University in Hattiesburg. Alice taught for several years, mostly in small towns close to the one in which she was born. Earlier, she had entered training to become a registered nurse, but had to quit to help her brothers and sisters get through school after their mother died.

She moved to Reno with her husband in 1938 and found work as a maid. Alice remembered that when she took up residence in Reno typically restaurant signs announced, "No Colored Trade Solicited" or "No Negroes Allowed," and even on one restaurant window, "No Indians, dogs, or Negroes Allowed."

Together Alice and "Al" founded the Reno-Sparks branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in 1945. Before his untimely death in 1946, they were instrumental in founding the Robert H. Brooks Post of the American Legion for Black veterans, as Blacks were not allowed in other posts. Her husband was denied admittance twice to the Reno Veteran's Hospital after he became ill. Finally, he was admitted but died soon after. Never allowing herself to become bitter, she told a newspaper reporter in an interview in 1978 that, "Instead of wasting time with that foolishness, I can do something constructive." And true to her word, Alice Smith spent 50 years working for equality before her death in 1990.

Amongst her many honors were being chosen as Nevada delegate to the United Nations Conference in San Francisco in 1974; delegate to the President's White House Conference on Aging in 1971; delegate to the Federation of the Blind Conference in Hawaii, being appointed to the State Welfare Board by Governor Mike O'Callaghan, as well as the State Advisory Committee for Older Americans, the State Advisory Board on Home Nursing, and the Nevada Foster Grandparents Board. She served as chairperson for the Economic Opportunity Board of Washoe County and was selected for “Who’s Who Among Black Americans” in 1975. That same year she was chosen as the “Woman of the Year” by the Sparks Business and Professional Women’s Club.

In 1976, an “Alice Smith Award” was established by the Community Services Agency. This award was presented to the board member who had contributed the most to the community during the year. She served for two years as chairperson of this Board. For twenty-five years she volunteered her time and energy to the American Red Cross in Reno and served as a member of their board of directors. Alice was a charter member of the Nevada League of Women Voters and also was active in her church, serving for three years as legislative chairperson for the northern Nevada and California organization of Church Women United. In 1966 she was the CWU delegate to the Race Relations Institute in Nashville, Tennessee. In 1972 Alice received the Service to Mankind Award from the Sierra Nevada District of Sertoma International. She was a member of the Democratic Central Committee, South Gate Chapter Order of Eastern Star, Berkeley, California, and Sparks United Methodist Church. An elementary school in Golden Valley, north of Reno, was named after her in 1989.

“Let’s not throw away our lives,” Alice said. “Let’s do something constructive. I always feel like I want to climb up a little bit, and maybe I can take someone with me.”

She was a woman who walked the walk to improve the lives of all people, was a leader in the fight against injustice and bigotry and valiantly proved that one person can make a difference.

2025 Legislative Preview with Lobbyist Tess Opferman

By Sue Davis

On September 14, 2024, NWHP held their monthly program at the Sparks Heritage Museum, which featured lobbyist Tess Opferman. Approximately 25 people attended, including two students from Reno High School that are currently enrolled in the We The People program.

Ms. Opferman spoke about the life of lobbyists as well as upcoming ballot issues. She shared her insight into working with Nevada’s legislators and some of her successes with the passing of bills that she supported. Her talk was very engaging and gave us a better understanding of the role of lobbyists.

Moonshine Tombstones

By Patti Bernard

On October 19, 2024, NWHP members visited Carson City's Lone Mountain Cemetery to learn about some of the extraordinary Nevada women buried there. The trip provided us with an interesting look at a 'yesterday's' tombstone style that, unintentionally, was used for nefarious purposes and presented an unanswered question about one of the tombstones we visited.

The history of tombstones in the burial process is quite interesting. They were, and still are, an expensive end to the burial process for many families. Until the practice of cremation was more widely accepted in the United States around 1900, in-ground burials were the norm. All types of grave markers were utilized, from wood to the costliest sculptured marble memorials. Like everything else, tombstone styles come and go, depending on the era they were designed and purchased.

Beginning in the 1870s, a Bridgeport, Conn. company produced a zinc tombstone that was sandblasted to imitate the matte appearance of stone. One could order a gray tone, a bronze finish, or paint it. More affordable and more durable than some stone materials, this type of metal marker could easily be made decorative. Panels could be added to accommodate present and future family burial information. Unintentionally, they became a focus of law enforcement with the advent of the Prohibition era in the 1920s.

There are approximately 15 of those zinc tombstones in Lone Mountain and one marks the grave of an early Nevada pioneer. Kate Sweeney is the name on her memorial, but as the saying goes, there is more to the story of Kate than meets the eye. She came to Gold Hill, Nev. in late 1879 with her husband Edward F. McKinney from Augusta, Maine. The couple had three boys, one of which died in infancy. McKinney owned a saloon in Gold Hill. He died there in 1888. The Storey County Death Records list his death date and burial in the Gold Hill Cemetery, several miles south of Virginia City.

In 1890, Kate married Eugene Sweeney and moved to Carson City with her surviving children. Around 1895, Kate became the matron of the Ormsby County Poor Farm. She died in 1913. Mr. Sweeney purchased a zinc tombstone for his wife. After Kate's death, he remarried and returned to Massachusetts. Both McKinney boys graduated from Carson High School and moved to California. They had no further association with Carson City.

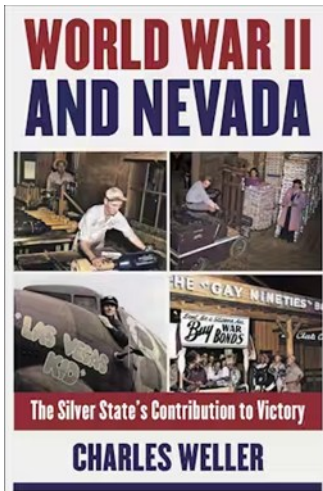

Oddly, next to Kate's metal tombstone is a granite tombstone for E.F. McKinney, her first husband. It's of a later vintage, and no record has been located of when it was placed, or who purchased it. The question remains. Was McKinney's body exhumed some years later and placed in Lone Mountain with the tombstone? There is no cemetery record of his burial in Lone Mountain, but early cemetery records are often incomplete. It seems unlikely that years later, someone would go through the effort and expense to move the body. Did one (or both) of the sons come back to Carson years later, have their father moved and placed beside their mother, or just purchase a rather expensive tombstone? The mystery might never be solved.

But back to Mrs. Sweeney's metal tombstone. Most cemeteries in the early west were located some distance outside the town. Lone Mountain Cemetery was no exception. Mr. Sweeney purchased a gray, rather ornate zinc tombstone for his wife, and it indeed has panels. Because of the ease of removing the panels, as they were simply attached with screws, smugglers or bootleggers used the tombstones as receptacles for selling outlawed liquor. They would go to the cemetery after midnight, place flasks inside the tombstone, and collect the cash. The tombstones were referred to as "moonshine tombstones." At least one of those memorials located in the Lone Mountain Cemetery was used for such a purpose, according to a family member. However, as far as we know, Mrs. Sweeney's was not one of them.

The large Civil War Memorial, in the middle of the old part of the cemetery, is also a zinc monument with panels on all four sides of the memorial. Those panels, and possibly other such tombstone panels in the cemetery are now welded shut. Prohibition ingenuity created enhanced uses for tombstones in addition to honoring those who have left us.

Nevada Women of World War II

By Joy Orlich

Thirty members and guests attended our November program, a luncheon at the Twisted Fork featuring local author and historian, Chuck Weller, discussing excerpts from his recent book, World War II and Nevada.

Chuck Weller received his undergraduate degree from St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia; a juris doctorate from Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.; and a master's degree and PhD from the University of Nevada, Reno. He practiced law in Reno, Nev. from 1982 through 2004 and hosted a weekly talk program on KOH radio, "Chuck Weller and the Law" from 1991 to 2004. He served three elected terms as a District Court Judge in Reno from 2005 through 2021 and continues to serve as a senior judge. Weller is the historian for the Reno chapter of the United States Navy League.

Weller's talk focused on the role Nevada women played in supporting the war effort. While war raged in Europe beginning in 1939, it seemed remote to most Nevadans, until the bombing of Pearl Harbor and with it a declaration of war. Nevadans sprang into action.

Women trained as pilots and ferried planes across the Sierras. Women worked in the massive magnesium processing plant in the town of Henderson, Nevada. They sold war bonds, tended victory gardens, sewed clothing, and made blankets. The American Women's Voluntary Services formed a Reno chapter in 1942 to contribute to the work of other local service organizations.

Local women trained to serve as a civilian ambulance corp. Training included 10 weeks of classes on all phases of first aid, followed by instruction in minor automobile and truck repair.

These narratives and various remarkable photos are just some of the highlights of Chuck's talk. NWHP past president, Patti Bernard called Weller's book "fascinating." "One of the best Nevada history books I've ever read," she said.

Judith Reuter, Barbara Finley, Betty Holcomb, & Barbara Casci. Kathy Noneman in background

On Saturday, December 7, 2024, 20 NWHP members and friends gathered at Patti Bernard's home to celebrate the end of another successful NWHP year. A variety of soups and salads were on the menu, complimented by some tasty desserts.

As this event fell on our national Pearl Harbor Day, Patti used Chuck Weller's book, World War II and Nevada: The Silver State's Contribution to Victory, to talk about the effects that the bombing, and resulting war, had on Nevada residents. Nevadans stepped up immediately, contributing many of the strategic materials used in the making of bombs and other wartime machinery. Henderson, Nev., south of Las Vegas, was established during WWII as a housing community for workers at the Basic Magnesium, Inc. (BMI) plant, which was built to supply magnesium for munitions and airplane parts. Henderson is now the second largest city in the state.

Betty Holcomb shared a memory of WW II as someone who, at the age of 11 years, was directly affected by the events of December 7, 1941. Her family lived in Carlin, Nev., which was built beside the transcontinental railroad tracks. Troop trains would stop there to refuel on their way to the West Coast from the East. Young Betty and her friends would meet the trains and sell apples to the soldiers for a little 'pin money' at five cents an apple.
