Great News - Biographical Encyclopedia has a Publisher

The Bio Encyclopedia is at the publisher! Finally, all of our hard work has come to fruition. Last week we had a meeting with Stephens Press here in Las Vegas and they loved our project. We have delivered the manuscript to them as of Friday, January 28, 2005. I cannot tell you what a resounding shout of joy echoed throughout the LeMere household to finally have this completed after five years of meeting and mentoring the writers. Originally it was a project that Rose Irwin started and I helped her with, but when Rose became ill it became mine. You all know how that goes. Anyway we found a generous benefactor in Bernice Fischer at our last Southern meeting and that gave us the right amount of monies to find a publisher. I know that Stephens Press will do a great job and I can't wait to see the results. Am I done with this project now? Not at all. This is only volume one!! A sincere thank you to all of you writers and others who made this dream possible for the Southern Region.

As you read this we are within weeks of seeing our dream come true. All of our hard work for the past two or more years will come to fruition when on March 9th in Washington, D.C. we see the statue of Sarah Winnemucca dedicated in our nation’s capitol. I cannot tell you how proud I am of this wonderful group of women that I am fortunate enough to be a part of. As I went from organization to organization this past fall speaking about Nevada Women’s History Project, thanking them for their donations to the Sarah Winnemucca Project, I was filled with emotion, realizing that we women stood together for a cause and made it happen. We have made history again, ladies, just as we did in the time of suffrage. That statue of Sarah Winnemucca will stand in the United States Capitol through time and our children and their children will know that we put it there.

You all will receive information in the mail soon on the Oasis Conference. This information will be mailed to all members from the Department of Cultural Affairs in Carson City. Our second 7 foot bronze statue of Sarah Winnemucca is to be dedicated in Carson City on April 6, 2005 at 5:30 p.m. as part of this conference. This statue is an exact replica of the one in our nation’s capitol. So those of you who were unable to attend the Washington, D.C. dedication will have an opportunity to attend the event in Carson City. A reception will follow the dedication. We are expecting about 1500 attendees. Don’t miss this opportunity to celebrate with us.

Finally, your State Committee has requested from Governor Guinn that the remaining 3-1/2 foot bronze statue of Sarah Winnemucca be placed in the Grant Sawyer Building in Las Vegas. Governor Guinn has approved this request and the statue will be dedicated in Las Vegas most likely after the 2005 Legislative Session is over, which is in June. We are presently checking with Governor Guinn and Mayor Goodman for a firm date. We have also asked Governor Guinn to declare a Sarah Winnemucca Day.

I know all of you are busy with projects and meetings in your respective regions as the work goes on. Every day I get emails with new ideas and proposals. Keep up the good work out there. Every one of you are so valuable to the organization.

In friendship,

Joan LeMere, State Committee President

Sarah Winnemucca Books Donated to Nevada Schools and Libraries

The Nevada Women’s History Project and the Nevada State Library and Archives recently sent copies of Sally Zanjani’s book, Sarah Winnemucca, to public libraries and public secondary schools in Nevada. Eighty copies of her book were given to public libraries and 163 copies to public secondary schools. Financing of this project was provided by donations received by the Sarah Winnemucca Statue Fund.

In addition, copies of the biography will go to Washington, D.C. to be given as thank you gifts in appreciation of the congressional staff efforts to make the dedication ceremony and reception possible.

Many letters have been received from schools thanking our organization for donating the books to their libraries. Among them is one from Lynda Badger, Librarian, Basic High School, Henderson. She thanked NWHP and NSLA for the book and wrote "We currently have three classes using it in their Nevada history research papers."

News From The North

As we deal with more snow than we have had in years our north members try to keep up with all our commitments while we slide around in ice and fog. Oh well, that's why I have lived in Nevada for more than 25 years. We always tell everyone that we love our four seasons. We would just like a little less of this winter season to love. Everyone is so excited about our trip to Washington, D.C. for the statue dedication on March 9th. Kathleen Clemence is still working hard putting out fires so the trip will go without a hitch. We owe her so much for putting this all together as we do Dema Guinn without whose help we wouldn't have exceeded our goal in raising the money. At our March 10th Conference our keynote speaker will be General Wilma Vaught who was the driving force behind the establishment of the Women in the Military Memorial where we will hold the conference. The Nevada Women's fund has already sold two maquettes of the statue and has contacted many other interested people. NWHP is also holding a drawing on April 6th for the project's maquette and opportunity tickets are still available. That is the date for the Oasis conference in Carson City. A copy of the Sarah Winnemucca statue will be presented to the state then. Mary Anne Convis is in charge of sales of the maquettes and the presentation at the Oasis Conference. Cherry Jones is in charge of the opportunity tickets and the drawing here in the North. My thanks to both of them who work tirelessly.

To continue our celebration of Women's History Month we will have a book signing dinner on March 19th for some of our author members. Two of our members have new books.

Dixie Westergard has a new book about Dr. Mary Fulstone, and Jan Cleere's long awaited More Than Petticoats: Remarkable Nevada Women is out. This book is part of a series published by Globe Press and features Nevada women born before 1900 who lived unusual lives or made remarkable contributions to the state.

Thank you letters continue to pour in from libraries across the state as they receive their gift of a hard copy of Sally Zanjani's book about Sarah Winnemucca. A plate in each book indicates that the book is a gift from NWHP and the State Library and Archives. My thanks to Holly Von Valkenburgh for doing all the work on this project. Kay Sanders continues to do such a wonderful job on the newsletter and the website with Nancy Oakley. Grace Davis is always so gracious about taking charge of distributing the newsletter. Kay and Carrie Porter are really getting the Jean Ford Research Center organized and user friendly. Helping them are Georgia Hedrick and Patti Bernard. We have such a wonderful group of women who are devoted to this project, but we always need fresh ideas and new people to serve on our Board and committees. Please call me and let me add your name to our list of volunteers. We need your help and ideas for a better organization.

Kathleen Noneman, Chair, Northern Region Steering Committee
As my term on the NWHP Board draws to a close, I can’t help but look back to how my involvement with this organization began. Then District Court Judge, Deborah Agosti, invited a group of us Court House workers to a brown bag lunch to meet Jean Ford who was starting a new organization about women in Nevada history. That was in 1993 and Jean invited me to join her in her efforts. Since then I have served in many capacities on both the Northern and State Boards. This organization was a natural for me because I have always been interested in families, especially women and children and their lives and history. This interest has led me to my several careers, as wife, mother, teacher, family law attorney and Family Court Master.

I was born in Woodland, California and grew up on a farm in Yolo County. I was fortunate to have a family who valued education and sent me to Holy Rosary Academy in Woodland where I first developed my interest in History. I graduated from Chico High School and from Chico State College where I majored in English and History. I was lucky enough to marry Charlie Noneman, a career Air Force Officer, have two great sons and travel the world. I was able to teach in most places where I lived and taught everything from kindergarten through junior college. In Turkey, I discovered ESL teaching which I was also able to do here in Reno for seven years at Tracer Middle School. Along the way, I acquired an MS in Business and a Law Degree. I left teaching and set up a family law practice with Barbara Finley and then joined the Family Court in 1992. I still serve as a Court Master part time. I come from a long line of strong-willed, intelligent and hard-working women and was greatly influenced by them. I enjoy researching and writing about the women in my family and also about the women of Nevada. I am particularly interested in researching and writing about the women who have become attorneys in Nevada. I still love to travel and enjoy doing so with my husband, children and three grandchildren.

nwHP Authors and Researchers Produce New Works

Our members have been busy. The happy results of their efforts are books being published and research made available. Dixie Westergard, author of Dat-so-la-lee, Washoe Indian Basketmaker and The Lake Tahoe Story, recently announced the publication of her latest book, Dr. Mary: The Story of Mary Hill Fulstone, M.D., A Nevada Pioneer. Copies are available for sale at the Sundance Bookstore and the Nevada Historical Society in Reno, the Nevada State Museum in Carson City, and the Carson Valley Museum and Cultural Center in Gardnerville. Dixie also donated a copy to the Jean Ford Research Center.

Robert E. Stewart updated his book, Aurora: Nevada’s Ghost City of the Dawn, which was first published in 1994. The new edition is more than double its original size with information on Samuel Clemens’ experiences in Aurora; descriptions of women’s lives in the camp; and stories about the town’s designation as county seat of both Mono County, California, and early-day Esmeralda County, until it was decided that Aurora was in Nevada.

Elko native Cyd McMullen completed her dissertation on Nevada women’s clubs between 1860 and 1920. The title of her work is, “Work Worth Doing: Nevada Women’s Clubs and the Creation of Community, 1860-1920”. Copies can be reviewed at the University of Nevada, Reno Getchell Library, Special Collections Department at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, and the Great Basin Community College in Elko.

She plans to do a book on this topic soon.

One of our members, Jan Cleere, who resides in Arizona, authored More Than Petticoats: Remarkable Nevada Women. A separate article on her book appears in this issue.

Congratulations to the four of you. To all of our members and friends currently doing research on Nevada women, keep up your good work. NWHP’s mission is being accomplished thanks to your efforts.

Biography:

In 1870 or 1880, Gue Gim’s father, Ng Louie Der (Der Ng Louie in Chinese), immigrated to California, where he established a business in San Francisco’s Chinatown. He married before leaving China, but his wife remained behind to serve his parents, as was the custom, while he was away seeking better opportunities. As a merchant, one of the classes exempted from the anti-Chinese immigration acts of the time, Der was able to travel freely back and forth to visit his wife, who bore him five children. When Gue Gim was eight, her mother died, and she was sent to live with relatives. As for Ng Louie Der, he married a woman living in China and started another family there.

In 1912 Der decided to bring his second wife and four of his children, including Gue Gim, to the United States. The family sailed to California by way of Hong Kong and Honolulu. On arriving in San Francisco, they were taken to Angel Island, the immigration station, and detained there for five days. Generally, the Chinese immigration acts excluded from entry Chinese without family connections within the United States. The result was that “paper sons” were born. These were children with papers that falsely claimed they had relatives in the United States for the purposes of immigration, and a rigorous and intensive examination process was created by immigration officials to identify them. At first, the interrogators did not believe Gue Gim was Ng Louie Der’s daughter because she was very slender, while her father and brothers were fat. The problem was solved when the family was called together to see if they looked alike. Fortunately for Gue Gim, “...my face looked like my daddy’s face. Because of that, they told me I could go on shore.”

In Chinatown Gue Gim and her stepmother led secluded lives, which was customary for the wives and female children of upper-class Chinese, and for the next four years she probably spent most of her time helping her stepmother care for the growing Der family, leaving the home only to attend church and a private Chinese language school.

In 1916 Gue Gim married Tom Fook Wah, one of her father’s old friends. Tom had visited Der the year before while he was on vacation from his job in Nevada, saw Gue Gim and asked her father for her hand in marriage. Tom, born in Marysville, California around 1871, was taken to China as a young child when his parents died. He returned to the United States as a young man and traveled around California, Arizona and Nevada, hoping to find work in the mines. Instead he worked first as a laborer and then as a cook. In 1911 he arrived in Prince, just outside Pioche in Lincoln County, Nevada, and eventually had a good job working for the Prince Consolidated Mining Company as manager of the mine’s boarding house and restaurant. When Tom, a bachelor, injured his leg in 1914 or 1915, the doctor treating him advised him to get a wife to take care of him. But finding a Chinese wife in the Pioche area would be difficult – the Chinese population, which had dwindled since the boom days of the 1880s, was mostly male. His problem was solved when he met Gue Gim.

At first, Gue Gim was not enthusiastic about marrying an older man. However, such marriages were common in Chinese society, and Gue Gim obeyed her father’s wishes. Although Tom wanted to get married right away, the wedding was postponed until the following year because Gue Gim’s stepmother was pregnant again and needed help. Gue Gim and Tom had a traditional Chinese wedding, planned and paid for by Tom, as was the custom.

When the newlyweds arrived in Prince, Tom returned to work, but Gue Gim, being shy and knowing no English, remained secluded in their home. Tom, whose dining room was the town’s social center, was well liked in the community and tried to encourage Gue Gim by teaching her a few words in English. She learned a few more words from a teacher on a visit to her family in San Francisco. Then one of the mine owners who knew of her desire to learn English made arrangements for her to attend the Prince School, where she learned quickly and passed through eight grades in several years.

During her time at the Prince school, Gue Gim formed two friendships that lasted throughout her lifetime. One friend was Mary Thomas, daughter of Leonard G. Thomas, the superintendent of the Combined Metals Reduction Company of the Prince Mine; the other was Elizabeth Gemmill, whose father purchased the Prince Consolidated Mining Company.

Tom’s business, which had prospered during the years of World War I, declined when the war ended in 1918, but revived during the 1920s. Sometime in 1927 or 1928 a fire broke out in the boarding house where Tom, who did not believe in banks, kept all his money. With all their money gone, Tom and Gue Gim decided to go to South China, hoping to collect some of Tom’s inheritance and to liquidate some of his investments there.

In China Gue Gim enrolled in a teacher’s training course in order to continue her education while Tom took care of business. The Wahs had planned to return to the United States within the year, but remained for another year because Tom became ill. While in China, Tom and Gue Gim adopted the two-year-old boy of a poor family. The Wahs were forced to leave the child behind with relatives when they returned to the United States in 1929 because American government officials did not recognize the adoption.

Back in the United States, Gue Gim stayed in San Francisco with her relatives and went to work for the first time doing finishing work at a garment factory. Meanwhile, Tom returned to Prince to reestablish himself and find a permanent home, but when he got to Prince, he discovered that the Depression was making an impact on the activities of the Prince Mine. He decided to move to nearby Caselton where the mine was doing better. He rented a building and sent for Gue Gim. Being short on cash and needing help, Tom, for the first time, asked Gue Gim to work in his boarding house restaurant.

In 1933 Tom’s health began to fail to the extent that medical treatment was needed, and with the community’s help, the Wahs traveled to San Francisco. Tom died of cancer on August 17 at the age of seventy-one, and his remains were sent back to China for burial. Gue Gim remained in San Francisco with relatives for a few weeks and then returned to Prince to settle his affairs.

Gue Gim was welcomed back by her friends. Leonard Thomas, the mine superintendent, told her about a planned expansion of the Prince Mine and that boarding house and cooking work would soon be available there. He offered her a place to stay and temporary work in the meantime. Her family in San Francisco wanted her to return there, but Gue Gim decided to stay in Prince. She eventually went to work for the Prince Mine, and when the cook at the Caselton mine quit, she worked both jobs.

The mines began to gear up for World War II, but faced a manpower shortage. To solve this problem, the government exempted from military service men who had mining experience or were willing to work in the mines, and at the larger Caselton mine the government built houses and dormitories for the influx of men. Gue Gim rented a building for a restaurant and set about finding help by advertising that she would pay the fare of anyone interested in coming to the area. Some foods were rationed or in short supply, but Gue Gim found ways to manage. One of Gue Gim’s visitors during the war years was former president Herbert Hoover, who had an interest in several of the mines in the area. The former president greatly enjoyed her company and food whenever he visited the area. Gue Gim would later be invited as an honored guest when the Hoover Memorial Library in Iowa was dedicated in the 1960s.

Most of the miners returned home after the war ended in 1945, leaving only a few to eat at Wah’s. Then production declined sharply during the 1950s and 1960s as a result of the government’s policy of allowing low-cost foreign metals into the country. The Prince area soon had the appearance of a ghost town. Fortunately for Gue Gim, her reputation as an outstanding chef had spread throughout the Southern Nevada area, and people from as far away as Las Vegas made reservation to eat American and Chinese food at her café. In 1971 an article about Wah’s Café appeared in the November 25 issue of the Los Angeles Times, which brought regional recognition for Gue Gim and her café.

Over the years Gue Gim had kept up efforts to bring her adopted son in China to the United States. She appealed to U.S. Senators and other government officials, but without success. Finally in 1971 she gave up and went to visit her son in China instead. Her adopted son was now married and had two sons and two daughters. Eventually Gue Gim was able to bring a granddaughter to the United States.

In 1980 Gue Gim and her restaurant were featured in an article in the May/June issue of Nevada: The Magazine of the Real West. Since help was hard to find, Gue Gim did all the work herself and had decided that advance reservations were required before she would start to cook. The reviewer described Wah’s

Also in 1980 Gue Gim was named grand marshal of the Nevada Day parade in Carson City, and newspapers throughout the state carried the story. Reno newspaper columnist Rollan Melton described her as “a little bit of a woman with a great big heart, a heap of courage and a fascinating background.” The local Lincoln County Record congratulated Gue Gim on being the second woman in a row (Dr. Mary Fulstone of Smith Valley was honored the previous year) and the first person of Oriental ancestry to be chosen to lead the parade. The paper hailed her as “Nevada’s Queen – Our Missy Wah.” On October 31 Gue Gim rode at the head of the parade in an open car, accompanied by her lifelong friend Mary Thomas, her granddaughter, and her granddaughter’s husband.

During the 1980s and into the 1990s further recognition for Gue Gim came in newspaper and magazine articles, oral histories, essays in the Nevada Historical Society Quarterly, and Asian immigration and pioneer American women studies.

By late 1985 Gue Gim had essentially retired. She died at her home in Prince on June 15, 1988, and is buried in nearby Pioche. Biographical sketch by Kathleen Thompson

New Happenings at the Jean Ford Research Center

Two University of Nevada, Reno students were hired to work with volunteers at the Jean Ford Research Center located at our state office in Reno. They will be working to sort, identify, and catalogue the material on Nevada women that is housed in our office. In addition to boxes of assorted items to be gone through, we have several collections which were donated to NWHP. These will be thoroughly examined, the material itemized, and either turned over to the appropriate repository for researchers to access or kept at the Jean Ford Research Center.

Carrie Porter held a training session on Wednesday, January 19th, for the new hires as well as volunteers who will be working with the students. The volunteers included Kathy Noneman, Patty Bernard, Kay Sanders and Georgia Hedrick. A second training session is scheduled for Tuesday, February 8th. Several of our members who were unable to attend the first session will be present and will be working at the Center for the next few months with the students. We anticipate the work to be completed by next summer.

All of this has been made possible by the receipt of a John Ben Snow Trust grant to NWHP. Thanks to their generosity we have the funds available to hire students and also to continue paying for our Website and long distance access.

Congratulations:
- to Mitsu Johnson on her retirement from the Girl Scout Frontier Council in Las Vegas. A Mardi Gras theme party in her honor was held on February 3rd. She had been employed by the Girl Scouts for 20 years. Her new life will involve doing some traveling but she will remain active in NWHP. A contribution to the Girl Scouts can be made in honor of her retirement. Their address is: Girl Scouts Frontier Council, 2941 Harris Avenue, Las Vegas, NV 89101. More information can be found at: www.frontiercouncil.org.

Thanks to:
- Lisa-Marie Lightfoot and Isabel Espinoza for their help in putting together the information that the Reno-Sparks Convention and Visitors Authority had requested to give to visitors. They gave them brief histories of historic Nevada women in the area as well as where they lived.

Of Note:
- In 1997 the International Women’s Forum leadership contacted our founder Jean Ford to help establish a Nevada chapter. At that time only Nevada and one other state did not have a chapter. Since Jean was not able to take on that assignment, Carolyn Sparks took up the challenge and was successful. This past October the World Leadership Conference and Gala of the International Women’s Forum was held in Las Vegas. The IWF is a networking vehicle for top women leaders throughout the world in all fields. Jean would be proud of Nevada’s involvement.

Condolences:
- To the family of Margaret Wells Butts, NWHP 2001 Roll of Honor recipient. Margaret passed away in Winnemucca on November 14, 2004 at the age of 90. She had been an active member of the Humboldt County Museum and the North Central Nevada Historical Society. Several of her articles were published in the Humboldt Historian.
